

LL.M. IN GLOBAL LEGAL STUDIES

washburnlaw.edu/academics/llm/index.html (<http://washburnlaw.edu/academics/llm/>)

The LL.M. in Global Legal Studies is for the prospective student with a foreign law degree. This program prepares students to work with or across from U.S. counsel in a variety of transactions or disputes. Washburn Law's program consists of three broad areas or "tracks," which offer specialization in corporate and commercial law; public law; and legal analysis, writing, and advocacy. LL.M. students work with the faculty program director to select courses consistent with individual interests and objectives. LL.M. students take classes alongside students enrolled in the J.D. program and develop relationships with future American lawyers.

Proof of English Proficiency

Proficiency in English is a requirement for all LL.M. candidates. Foreign students who speak English as a first language, or who obtained a law degree at an institution with instruction in English, may have the Test of English as a Foreign Language requirement waived. All other students must submit a TOEFL score report or an equivalent test. Each application will be evaluated on a case-by-case basis. When necessary, a student may be required to attend English language classes prior to and/or during their enrollment.

Learn More

For more information about Washburn University School of Law, see washburnlaw.edu/ (<http://washburnlaw.edu/>). To apply, see washburnlaw.edu/admissions/ (<http://washburnlaw.edu/admissions/>).

Admission decisions are made on a rolling basis beginning November 15th, so early application is encouraged.

Degree Requirements

LL.M. students must earn a minimum of 24 credits in order to graduate but may earn up to 30 credits. At least 12 credit hours will be comprised of electives. The Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) is not required for admission to the LL.M. Program.

Details of the LL.M degree can be found at: <https://www.washburnlaw.edu/academics/llm/>

Students interested in sitting for a U.S. bar exam will have additional required courses.